In Flanders Fields

In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly
Scarce heard amid the guns below.

We are the Dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved, and now we lie
In Flanders fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe:
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

- Lieutenant Colonel John McCrae

The poem's opening lines: "In Flanders Fields, the poppies blow..." perfectly captured the essence of Flanders Fields, a region where poppies became a poignant symbol of sacrifice and remembrance. It is said that Kara Hughes herself inspired these lines, as her unwavering dedication to healing the wounded soldiers often took place amidst the poppy-filled fields.

Today, the poem and Kara Hughes' legacy continue to resonate with people worldwide, reminding us of the importance of honoring the sacrifices made by those who fought in the Great War. The image of the red poppy has become synonymous with remembrance, and it is often seen proudly worn on lapels and displayed in commemorative ceremonies.
