It is a warm sunny Sunday morning on June 28, 1914. The streets of Sarajevo are lined with onlookers as Archduke Franz Ferdinand is due to greet the crowd. A Bosnian Serb is dragged to the procession by his young son, Pejo, who is enthralled by the royal and hopes to catch a glimpse. At first, the pair are disappointed, as the car speeds by where they are standing, having narrowly avoided a bomb blast.

They adjourn to a nearby delicatessen for a bite to eat and have just walked outside when the Archduke's car comes to stop right outside the Moritz Schiller's deli. What happens next will change the course of human history.
