The Beginnings of Whitemud Walking

Matthew's love for hiking and nature exploration dates back to his childhood. Growing up surrounded by the picturesque landscapes of Alberta, Canada, he developed a deep appreciation for the beauty that nature offers.

His connection with Whitemud Ravine, a natural oasis within the city, began during his high school years. Enchanted by the tranquility and serenity it provided, Matthew found solace in the winding trails and lush greenery.

It was during one of his hikes through Whitemud Ravine that Matthew was struck by the idea of embarking on an extraordinary journey. He envisioned walking the entire length of the ravine, not just once but multiple times, igniting a flame within him that pushed him to make his dream a reality.

Resilience in the Face of Challenges

Matthew knew that the path he had chosen wouldn't be a walk in the park. His decision to undertake this endeavor came with its fair share of challenges. From harsh weather conditions to physical limitations, Matthew encountered obstacles that tested his commitment.

However, through sheer determination and unwavering focus, Matthew overcame each hurdle that came his way. His stubborn resolve to complete his goal drove him forward, even when the going got tough.

The physical and mental stamina required for such an arduous task didn't deter Matthew. Instead, it fueled his passion to keep walking and push past his limits. His incredible resilience has become an inspiration for many, reminding us all that with dedication, anything is possible.

An Inspiration to Others

Matthew's journey hasn't gone unnoticed. Along his path, he has encountered numerous people who have been profoundly inspired by his determination and love for nature.

Through social media platforms and personal interactions, Matthew has connected with a community of nature enthusiasts who have rallied behind his cause. His unwavering commitment to Whitemud Walking has fostered a sense of unity among individuals sharing the same passion.

Furthermore, Matthew's journey has acted as a catalyst for others to get outdoors and explore the wonders of nature. His story has encouraged people to connect with their surroundings, appreciate the beauty of the Whitemud Ravine, and embark on their own adventures.

Achieving Milestones and Beyond

Throughout his Whitemud Walking journey, Matthew has achieved several milestones. Each completion of the full length of the ravine marked a personal triumph, fueling his passion to push further.

With the support of the community that has embraced his cause, Matthew has gone on to organize charity events and guided tours, enabling others to experience the awe-inspiring beauty of Whitemud Ravine. These events have allowed people from all walks of life to connect with nature and make a positive impact on their lives.

Matthew's vision doesn't stop at Whitemud Ravine. He dreams of expanding his hiking expeditions to other natural treasures around the world, spreading his message of environmental consciousness and the transformative power of nature.

An Indigenous resistance historiography, poetry that interrogates the colonial violence of the archive

Whitemud Walking is about the land Matthew Weigel was born on and the institutions that occupy that land. It is about the interrelatedness of his own story with that of the colonial history of Canada, which considers the numbered treaties of the North-West to be historical and completed events. But they are eternal agreements that entail complex reciprocity and obligations. The state and archival institutions work together to sequester documents and knowledge in ways that resonate violently in people's lives, including the dispossession and extinguishment of Indigenous title to land.

Using photos, documents, and recordings that are about or involve his ancestors, but are kept in archives, Weigel examines the consequences of this erasure and sequestration. Memories cling to documents and sometimes this palimpsest can be read, other times the margins must be centered to gain a fuller picture. Whitemud Walking is a genre-bending work of visual and lyric poetry, non-fiction prose, photography, and digital art and design.

"Whitemud Walking is so smart and so ceaselessly innovative. It represents for me a fully assured instantiation of the Indigenous literary project: a confrontation of history's terrors head on and an articulation in the present of our beauty and indomitability. Weigel refuses the archive's efforts to flatten Indigenous subjectivity and, in so doing, opens up a kind of boundless space to remember and grieve but also to hope and imagine otherwise. A deeply felt accomplishment." –Billy-Ray Belcourt, author of A History of My Brief Body

"Whitemud Walking is a testament to the power of grief and outrage that so much theft has been allowed to bulldoze Indigenous land rights. Matthew James Weigel's passion for research both honours and mourns what has been trampled and lied about. This is a devastating read but one to learn from. Mahsi cho, Matthew. Your grief is our call to action to learn our own histories and build upon our own Indigenous testimonies of what really happened and when and who was there to witness it. Mahsi cho." –Richard Van Camp, Tlicho Dene author of The Lesser Blessed and Moccasin Square Gardens

"Whitemud Walking is a textual ecology, that through archival troubling, sampling, and reframing, allows the material, human, truly cellular historicity of treaty to enter as a living presence in our contemporary moment. Weigel writes, 'Here treaty means reciprocity and obligation. Here, treaty lasts forever'. This book is not the document you may hold in your hands but the shift in consciousness it fomented within you. It is a gift." –Liz Howard, author of Infinite Citizen of the Shaking Tent

"Echoing the caw and grackle of magpies, Matthew James Weigel's Whitemud Walking lives the sound of Treaty 6. Voices whisper sanctuary in creekbeds, papers rustle precedence in archives; there's a buzz in your ear, a catch in your throat – listen." –Derek Beaulieu, Banff Poet Laureate
